information on divisional

a. Rifle Regiment

For the composition of a rifle regiment, see Encls

D-F.

b. Medium Tank SP Regiment

The composition of a medium tank SP regiment of a guards rifle division is shown in Encls A and B. This regiment had two battalions of T-34 tanks and one battalion of SU-76 guns. each battalion had three companies.

25X1

If there were five tanks per company, there would be two two-tank platoons. The extra tank would be for the company CO. If there were 10 tanks per company, then there would be three three-tank platoons. Again, the extra tank would be for the company CO.

25X1

The SP gun battalion was called a "divizion", the Soviet term for an artillery battalion. It was composed of three batteries, each with four to five SP gun mounts. If there were five, one might have been for the CO, with the other four in two two-gun platoons.

25X1

c. Artillery Regiment

The composition of a gun artillery regiment of a guards rifle division is shown in Encls A and B. such a regiment had two battalions of 122-mm guns and one battalion of 122-mm howitzers. Each battalion had three firing batteries and one service battery.

j. Medical Battalion

25X1

A medical battalion (San Bat) was an organic part of the 95th Gds Rifle Div. []

25X1

[] each of the six regiments in the division had a medical company which was an organic part of the division medical battalion.

The medical company [] consisted of six or seven officers (two to three doctors, one dentist, two feldshers, and one pharmacist) and 10-15 EM. The company operated a 10-15 bed dispensary. [] the organization 25X1 was similar in each medical company. []

[] it was entirely possible that each separate battalion 25X1 also had a similar medical unit.

In addition to the six medical companies [] the medical battalion also included the personnel required to operate the following installations:

25X1

(1) A small hospital, capacity unknown (probably more appropriately called a dispensary.) This was in the same building with the medical battalion headquarters in AMSTETTEN (4807N-1452E.)

(2) Division hospital, capacity unknown, in ST POELTEN.

(3) A "polyklinik", capacity unknown, in ST POELTEN.

25X1

[] the total strength of the medical battalion was 100 officers (including doctors, dentists, feldshers, etc) and 200 EM and EW. The majority of the enlisted personnel at the division hospital were women.

All the medical facilities and the medical battalion were subordinate to the Chief of Medical Svcs (also CO of the medical battalion.)

Notes

1. This chart shows a very close estimate of the peacetime T/O of a guards rifle regiment.

2. [redacted]

25X1

3. The NCO School was a peacetime addition to the T/O. The strength figures shown are for cadre only. See also subpar A 5.

4. [redacted] the Band, Hq Plat, and Regtl Hq were considered separate units and were not in one common headquarters company. Hq Plat contained staff drivers, clerks, runners, and duty soldiers.

Notes

1. For further information on Regtl Rear Svcs, see Encl F.
2. For further information on Regtl Technical Svcs, see Encl D.
3. The Sr Medical Off was considered a staff officer. The officers beneath him are listed to show subordination. These officers and 10-15 EM formed the Regtl Medical Co.
4. Sections subordinate to the Chief of Rear Svcs, Deputy CO for Technical Matters, and Sr Medical Off were not considered as part of Regtl Hq. See Encl D for Organizational position of these sections.
5. The officers heading sections 1-7 were considered the CO's staff.
